Quarry Prison Gets Changes

In next Sunday's Atlanta Journal and Constitution Magazine you'll learn how and why the Buford Rock Quarry Prison for Incurrigibles changed, get a look at Thomasville abloom and see what a 1957 cover girl looks like today.

NEW LOOK—Buford's Rock Quarry Prison was created 21 years ago with the notion that bad boys should be made to suffer. For years inmates were treated like animals. But places and attitudes change and there is now a baseball diamond on the old quarry floor, the dining room has been decorated, and the dungeon has been converted into classrooms. Magazine's John Pennington examines how and why the changes came.

TOWN BLOOMS—Thomasville in the spring is a flower garden filled with azaleas, dogwoods, flowering peaches, wild honeysuckle and other flowers. Magazine's Andrew Sparks writes the story with colorphotos by Kenneth Rogers.
